RISK-OFF Escalating Middle East conflict and rising Treasury yields push markets firmly into risk-off territory.

Markets shifted decisively into risk-off mode as the U.S. military confirmed completing its sixth consecutive night of strikes on Iran. BTC trades at $62,868, down 2.08% over 24 hours, while total crypto market cap retreated to $2.25 trillion. The Fear & Greed Index sits at 27 (Fear) as BTC dominance climbed to 56.1%, signaling a classic flight to relative safety within crypto. On the macro front, the 10-year U.S. Treasury yield rose to 4.57% while VIX spiked to 17.9, confirming that geopolitical stress is bleeding into traditional markets. This week's July CPI release (prior 4.2%, forecast 3.8%) and PPI data carry elevated significance — the Middle East conflict's upward pressure on energy prices could re-anchor inflation expectations higher and reprice the odds for the July 29 FOMC meeting. DXY held flat near 100.70 while Brent crude climbed to $84.68, and gold is on track for its biggest weekly loss in six weeks.

Iran's IRGC say they targeted US command centre in Syria, state media reports - Reuters

AI Insight: Iran's IRGC claiming to have targeted a U.S. command center in Syria marks a dangerous escalation, signaling the conflict is taking on a broader regional dimension; this development coincided with BTC testing its key $62,369 support level, while a persistently negative Coinbase premium confirms weakening U.S. institutional demand.

Iran launches fresh attacks after sixth day of US strikes - Reuters

AI Insight: The sixth consecutive night of U.S. strikes on Iran signals the conflict has become entrenched rather than episodic; the sustained geopolitical uncertainty is driving energy prices higher and pushing VIX to 17.9, indicating a rising fear premium across traditional markets that is spilling into crypto.

Gold heads for biggest weekly loss in six as Middle East war fans inflation worries - Reuters

AI Insight: Gold heading for its biggest weekly loss in six weeks is a notable divergence from classic safe-haven behavior; rather than attracting war-driven demand, rising U.S. Treasury yields at 4.57% and the prospect that this week's CPI and PPI data could reset inflation expectations higher are weighing on the non-yielding metal.
