Global Macro & Crypto Market Intelligence

Fri, Jul 10 2026

NEUTRAL Chip-driven equity rally offsets geopolitical headwinds, but ETF outflows and Extreme Fear keep crypto in a cautious holding pattern.

Markets are presenting a mixed picture today: the Nasdaq surged on semiconductor strength, effectively shrugging off US-Iran tensions, while VIX at 16.08 remains relatively subdued. The 10-year US Treasury yield eased to 4.54%, yet the 2-year yield holds at 4.21%, pushing the 2s10s spread to a positive +33 bps as the curve continues to normalize. The DXY is nearly flat at 100.85, while gold heads for a weekly loss as Gulf attacks reinforce rate-hike bets. On the crypto front, BTC trades at $64,171, up +4.07% over seven days, yet the Fear & Greed index lingers at 23 (Extreme Fear) and total crypto market cap sits around $2.28 trillion. This week's FOMC Meeting Minutes released July 8 and Unemployment Claims on July 9 (forecast: 218K) keep uncertainty around the Fed's rate path alive, with the next FOMC meeting scheduled for July 29.

BTC funding rate stands at 0.0094% and ETH at 0.033%, both positive but well below overheating thresholds, indicating measured long-side pressure in futures without an imminent short-squeeze risk. ETH's notably higher funding rate relative to BTC suggests more concentrated speculative interest on the Ethereum side.
